NON-FARMERS MARKET

FOODIE THING OF THE MOMENT: FORAGING FOR DINNER IN YOUR BACKYARD?

Reuters

CARRBORO, N.C. No arugula could be found in the salad mix for sale this month at a new outdoor food market in North Carolina. Instead, tiny purple nettle flowers were scattered among the familiar pointed oval leaves of the chickweed plant.

Familiar, that is, because the plant grows wild in yards, fields and pavement cracks in the town of Carrboro, N.C., and across much of North America.

The unusual salad was one of the offerings at what organizers believe is the first U.S. market devoted to wild food and herbs, a kind of non-farmers market that will be held monthly in the town near the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

A similar weekly market is scheduled to open next month in Asheville, making North Carolina the latest hot spot in the growing movement toward eating food foraged from forests and fields rather than cultivated on farms.

The trend has gained cachet among foodies, with dishes featuring everything from exotic mushrooms found deep in forests to humble dandelions that are the scourge of suburban lawns. Foraging tours have cropped up across the country and farm-to-table dinners are giving way to forage-to-table affairs.

Wild food expert "Wildman" Steve Brill, who leads tours in New York City's Central Park, created a foraging app with descriptions of local plants and recipes. The head chef at Copenhagen's Noma, named "the best restaurant in the world" three years running by Restaurant magazine, is known for foraging his ingredients.

"Europe has embraced foraging for a while, and I think it's really taking hold in this country now," said Josh Lev, co-founder of the Wild Food + Herb Market in Carrboro. "It fits in with this idea of getting back to basics."

FORAGING FACTS

A few key points on finding food outside the farmers market.

1 Selling wild food raises questions about the value of paying for plants that people could pick from their own yards, observers say.

2 Outdoor forage markets are set up like farmers markets, with vendors signing up and selling their products.

3 Picking mushrooms, like these morels, requires expertise to avoid eating something harmful.

4 Many vendors also hold classes. The educational efforts help new foragers distinguish between edible plants and those that are less palatable or even poisonous.

5 Foragers have met sporadic resistance, usually due to concerns that rare plants and mushrooms will be over-harvested.

6 Many public parks prohibit or at least restrict foraging. New York City parks adopted a non-foraging stance after noting an uptick in the number of people doing it there.

7 National parks make exceptions for certain abundant foods, such as cactus pears in Arizona's Casa Grande Ruins National Monument and berries at Cape Cod National Seashore.

How to become a good bar regular

Stacey Andeen

» redeye@tribune.com
» @curvesandnerves

We Chicagoans can stumble out of our apartments or offices, throw a rock and hit at least three bars. The likelihood that one of those bars will be our regular bar is pretty good. And since you'll be there all the damn time, here are some tips to ensure that you are your bar of choice's favorite patron.

Be low maintenance

If you're "that guy with the complicated order," the bartenders will remember you, and not in a good way. As with every other job and every other industry, the client who has the fewest ridiculous demands is the FAVORITE client. Similarly, know what you want to order, be it food or drink. Bar staff will be more than happy to help you make a decision if you're unsure, but don't monopolize their time—they've got a lot of other people to help.

Tip fairly

A lot of people are on the "buck a drink" tip system, which works fine in college because all drinks in college (all drinks where I went to college, anyway) are less than $5. But we're not in college anymore. We have graduated to a lifestyle of craft beers and awesome cocktails, and those things cost more money. Tipping $1 on a $12 labor-intensive cocktail or an $8 craft beer kind of sucks. Do the math and be fair about it.

Know your bartender

This is a no-brainer. If you're going to post up at the bar three nights a week, it is absolutely to your benefit to get to know the people pouring your beers. I used to work at a place that was almost entirely populated with regulars and I knew ALL of them. I knew their drinks and food orders and jobs and who they were dating, and they knew a similar amount of information about me. At that point, it makes it feel less like you're going out to get drunk and more like you're going to hang out with your friends and have a few beers. It makes the bar feel like family, and that is a seriously wonderful feeling.

Don't expect freebies

Just because you come into a business a few nights a week does not mean you are entitled to free things from that business. Some customers seem to think that statement doesn't apply to bars. I used to work at a place where guy told me that he deserved something because of all the money he'd spent at the bar. Well I spend a lot of money at J. Crew, but I don't expect them to hand me free cashmere. A bar is still a business, and no one is entitled to free things.

Show the love

Your regular bar is a haven, a home away from home with a better collection of booze. It becomes a place to share stories and make friends and poor decisions. Treat the staff at your regular bar with love, and they'll be sure to do the same for you.

Gay marriage supporters rally outside the U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday.

FACEBOOK GOES RED: WHY NOW?

On Tuesday we posted the now more-than-"viral" red version of the Human Rights Campaign logo—shared thousands of times over in support of the Supreme Court hearings related to the Prop 8 and Defense of Marriage Act measures. As we watched our newsfeed morph into a sea of red profile shots, cover images and photos, we were curious to hear from you: Why now? How often do you share links or photos referencing a movement, or change your profile picture to support one?

> Maybe they don't use Facebook polls on Capitol Hill, but seeing your friends supporting social change grows public opinion, which in the end, does matter. —Jenna Karvunidis

> This is my first time changing my photo for a cause. And I think it's the right one to do it for. —Jeremy Rodgers

> I don't do it to necessarily make a difference. I just do it to show where I stand. I'm really open about my political opinions, so this is just another way of expressing myself. —Boris Bastidas

> I never change my picture. However, should the ruling not go the way I want it to, I am glad that my gay friends can see a sea of red support and know they are not alone in the fight. —Alexis BernardiReis

"It makes a difference here or there. Grassroots level change. I think it contributes to this particular movement having progressed more quickly recently." —Susan Goleblowski

> I have only done it once or twice.. seems like a lot more of my friends are doing this today than for any other event in the past. —Carly Keenan

> Supreme Court doesn't rule immediately after arguments. First they carefully count the changes in profile pictures on facebook. —Pablo W. Best

THE MARRIAGE REFS

HOW THE SUPREME COURT WILL RULE ON PROP 8, DOMA IS ANYONE'S GUESS

Reuters

WASHINGTON, D.C. Supreme Court justices signaled a reluctance Tuesday to rule broadly on the fundamental right to marriage for gay and lesbian people, suggesting a potentially anticlimactic outcome in the first of two related cases before the high court.

As sign-waving demonstrators massed outside, the court completed an hour and 20 minutes of oral argument on whether to let stand a California ban on same-sex marriage, without indicating a clear path forward by the end of the session.

The ban, known as Proposition 8, was the focus of the first of two days of argument. On Wednesday, the court will consider the 1996 federal Defense of Marriage Act, which denies federal benefits to married same-sex couples. Rulings in both cases are expected by the end of June.

The narrower DOMA case does not give the court the same opportunity to issue a broad ruling because the case relates only to a federal law that limits the definition of marriage to opposite-sex couples for the purposes of federal benefits.

Only the Proposition 8 case gave the court the option of finding a constitutional right for same-sex couples to marry.

The argument comes as public support for gay marriage hits record levels. Nine states and the District of Columbia now let gay couples marry. President Obama backs same-sex marriage, and his top Supreme Court lawyer urged the court to overturn Proposition 8.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, often the court's swing vote, twice asked whether the most prudent course would be not to rule in the Proposition 8 case. He said the case was taking the court into "uncharted waters."

POSSIBLE OUTCOMES

If the high court decides to rule in the Proposition 8 case, it has a spectrum of options. It could reinstate California's ban and leave each state to make its own decision about letting gays marry. The court could issue a narrow ruling that would create a right to gay marriage in California and perhaps a handful of other states. Or it could announce a constitutional right to gay marriage nationwide.

"I just wonder if the case was properly granted," Kennedy said during the 80-minute session in Washington. He suggested the appeals court decision striking down Proposition 8 was too narrow to warrant a high court ruling on the sweeping questions in the case.

Justice Sonia Sotomayor suggested it is too soon for the court to rule on gay marriage. "We let issues perk, and so we let racial segregation perk for 50 years from 1898 to 1954," she said.

Justice Samuel Alito questioned whether same-sex marriage has existed long enough to provide the basis for a decision backing it.

"Traditional marriage has been around for thousands of years. Same-sex marriage is very new," Alito said. "You want us to step in and render a decision based on an assessment of the effects of this institution which is newer than cellphones or the Internet?"

U.S. Solicitor General Donald Verrilli, Obama's top Supreme Court lawyer, urged the justices not to put off a ruling on gay marriage.

"Waiting is not a neutral act," Verrilli said. "Waiting imposes real costs in the here and now." BLOOMBERG CONTRIBUTED.

5 THINGS

The question of same-sex marriage went before the U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday in the first of two oral arguments this week on separate appeals. Here are five things we learned from arguments in this case. CNN

1 Buyer's remorse

Many of the nine justices wondered why they were deciding whether states can or should ban same-sex marriage.

» Republican Vice Presidential candidate Dick Cheney, whose daughter is a lesbian, indicates he supports gay marriage, saying "freedom means freedom for everybody" and that "people should be free to enter into any kind of relationship they want to enter into." He said states should regulate the matter, not the federal government.

2003

» The Supreme Court, in another decision written by Kennedy, strikes down a Texas anti-sodomy law in Lawrence v. Texas and reverses the 1986 Bowers ruling. Kennedy writes that this doesn't mean the government must recognize gay relationships. "Do not believe it," Justice Antonin Scalia dissents, saying the logic of the opinion points to allowing same-sex marriage.

» The Massachusetts Supreme Court rules in favor of same-sex marriage, and gay weddings begin in 2004.

2004

» San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom directs his county to allow same-sex marriages, arguing the state's voter-approved ban on gay marriage, Proposition 22, was unconstitutional. The state Supreme Court stops the weddings on grounds unrelated to the constitutionality of marriage.

» Canada allows gay marriage.

» California gay marriages become legal when the California Supreme Court strikes down the Prop 22 ban. That November voters add a ban to the state constitution—Proposition 8—ending a summer of gay marriage.

2009

» Iowa State Supreme Court legalizes same-sex marriage. It still is the only Midwest state that allows gay marriage.

» Federal court challenge to Proposition 8 filed, days before California Supreme Court lets Proposition 8 stand as a valid change to the state constitution. Eventually, federal district and appeals courts agree to strike down the ban, which now is before Supreme Court.

2012

» North Carolina approves a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage in May. In November, Maine, Maryland and Washington become the first states where voters approve same-sex marriage, and Minnesota rejects a new ban.

» President Obama endorses same-sex marriage.

2013

» Boy Scouts of America plan to vote in May whether to repeal the group's ban on openly gay members.

2 Kennedy's control

If there was any doubt, Tuesday arguments showed this is Anthony Kennedy's court. The 76-year-old jurist is likely to be the controlling or "swing" vote for however the court decides the tricky issues.

3 Scalia being Scalia

A good Supreme Court argument would not be complete without some rousing rhetoric from the senior associate justice. Antonin Scalia did not disappoint in transcripts.

4 Subdued liberals

The two newest justices, President Obama appointees Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan, have proven to be no-nonsense, aggressive questioners, but not so fiery with their rhetoric.

5 Courtroom flavor

The Supreme Court has a distinct aura when big cases are argued. The audience of several hundred spectators is juiced and the justices seem more energetic and engaged in their questioning.

Cubs' neighbors get tough

More night games, concerts would increase traffic woes, residents say

Chicago Tribune

Wrigleyville residents got to take their yearly swings at Cubs officials Tuesday over quality-of-life issues around the ballpark, as ongoing negotiations about a deal to fix up Wrigley Field raises the possibility of additional night games, concerts and real estate development that could bring even more people into the crowded neighborhood.

Parking and traffic were primary items of concern, with one neighborhood activist issuing a grade of F for how congestion is handled at the corner of Clark and Addison streets. Speakers at the meeting demanded answers on traffic and crowd control before they would support any major changes at Wrigley Field.

Cubs Chairman Tom Ricketts wasn't on hand for the annual meeting, which is required by city ordinance for the team to talk about its community efforts from the past year and take questions about the year ahead. But the Monday deadline that Ricketts has declared for an agreement to be reached on renovating Wrigley hung over the proceedings.

About 100 people crowded into a police station a block east of the stadium to hear from team representatives about their plans to spend $300 million in Ricketts family money to upgrade the iconic 99-year-old park that gives the neighborhood its name and brings in many of the revelers that have made it a bar-hopping and dining destination.

Will DeMille (center), president of the Lake View Citizens Council, asks a question Tuesday during an annual meeting for Cubs and city officials to report to the public about Wrigley Field and the surrounding neighborhood. ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE

Team officials and city employees spent most of their time talking about the past year, including police efforts to stop St. Patrick's Day partiers from urinating on lawns in the area and the city Department of Transportation's work to install new traffic signs.

But at the end of the meeting, many of the questions team officials got from neighbors dealt with the team's plans going forward.

Jill Peters, president of the Southport Neighbors Association, called on police to stop limousines from idling on residential streets. "They're taking up parking spaces and parking in the crosswalks," Peters said, adding that it will become a bigger problem if the team gets more night games, as it wants.

THE CONFLICT

The Cubs have been locked in talks with Ald. Thomas Tunney (44th) and the owners of rooftop clubs overlooking Wrigley Field. In exchange for funding the work themselves, the Ricketts family wants to add games at night and on late afternoons, and to see restrictions relaxed on advertising in the park. Mayor Emanuel has called for the parties to make a deal.

North Korea escalates war of words

1 SEOUL, South Korea North Korea repeated threats Tuesday to target U.S. military bases as Washington and its allies tightened economic sanctions against the isolated country by targeting Pyongyang's main foreign exchange bank with new measures.

The rhetoric from North Korea—which has threatened the U.S. with nuclear war and rehearsed drone attacks on South Korea—and Washington's hardening reaction drew more concern from China, Pyongyang's only major ally, which said the situation was "sensitive".

The Pentagon condemned North Korea's rhetoric, saying it was designed to "raise tensions and intimidate others."

"They need to stop threatening peace on the peninsula. That doesn't help anyone ... and we stand ready to respond to any contingency," Pentagon spokesman George Little told reporters.

Third trial for Knox

2 ROME Italy's top court on Tuesday ordered a retrial of American Amanda Knox and former boyfriend Raffaele Sollecito for the murder of British student Meredith Kercher, re-opening a case that prompted harsh criticism of the Italian justice system.

Kercher's half-naked body, with more than 40 wounds and a deep gash in the throat, was found in the apartment she shared with Knox in Perugia, where both were studying during a year abroad in 2007.

Prosecutors accused Knox and Sollecito, an Italian, of killing the 21-year-old Leeds University student during a drug-fueled sexual assault that got out of hand.

The two, who always protested their innocence, initially were found guilty in 2009 and sentenced to 26 and 25 years in prison, respectively, after a trial that grabbed headlines around the world.

In 2011, their convictions were quashed after forensic experts challenged evidence in the original trial, prompting accusations of a botched police investigation and leaving many aspects of the killing unexplained.

They were released after four years in prison and Knox returned to her family home near Seattle immediately afterward.

On Tuesday, the Court of Cassation overturned the acquittal and accepted a request for a retrial from prosecutors and Kercher family lawyers, who had criticized the earlier ruling as "contradictory and illogical."

Knox released a statement through spokesman David Marriott describing the court's decision as "painful" and said the prosecution's theory had repeatedly been revealed as "unfounded and unfair."

She has not yet discussed whether she will return to Italy for the trial, Marriott said.

ITALIAN JUSTICE
Unlike law in the U.S. and some other countries, the Italian system does not contain so-called "double jeopardy" provisions that prevent a defendant from being tried twice for the same offense. The court has not yet provided a full reasoning of its decision and a date has not yet been set for the new trial, which will be held in an appeals court in Florence, rather than Perugia, where the original trials were conducted.

4 A New Jersey convenience store owner has stepped forward to claim the winning ticket in the $338 million Powerball lottery, several media outlets reported Monday. The winning ticket could be claimed as a lump sum payment of $211 million. It was the fourth-largest pot in Powerball history.

N. Dakota tightens abortion law

5 North Dakota on Tuesday adopted the most restrictive abortion law in the country, as the governor signed a bill that bans the procedure in most cases once a fetal heartbeat can be detected. Supporters of abortion rights said they would challenge the measure in court.

Thanks for asking, but D-Rose’s teammates have no idea when he’ll return

By Bryan Crawford
FOR REDEYE

Waiting for Derrick Rose to come back to the basketball court is the ultimate test of patience for Bulls fans.

The end of the 2012-13 regular season is almost here, and the closest anyone has gotten to seeing D-Rose play has been in practice and during pregame shootarounds.

Everyone wants to know: When is Rose coming back? Sports writers get that question from friends and family a few times a day, if they’re lucky. On most days, it’s more.

So you might think for Rose’s teammates, the questions about when he’s coming back would be a huge distraction. Not for these Bulls.

WAITING GAME

"[Waiting on Derrick] isn't hard at all. That's my teammate. It's his body. It's like the same thing with my body. My teammates waited for me to feel right," Taj Gibson said after returning to the court last week from his own knee injury, a sprained MCL. "It's up to Derrick to feel right about playing again and trusting his body."

Daequan Cook is all too familiar with waiting on a superstar teammate to recover from an injury. In 2006, Cook played at Ohio State when future No. 1 draft pick Greg Oden sat out the first few months of the season recovering from wrist surgery. But the reserve guard echoed Gibson's comments.

"It's not really a distraction. We're professionals," Cook said. "It's just important for us to continue to do what we've been doing to get the wins that we've been getting and just know that we've got to keep playing, keep grinding it out and do the things we've been doing."

Second-year forward Jimmy Butler was the only player to say the wait for Rose has been tough.

"I feel like he's going to come back whenever he's ready and he's going to help us whenever he can," Butler said. "It's hard because you know you want your leader to be out there, but we want him to come back at 100 percent. Not 99, but a full 100."

Regardless of how the wait for Rose has affected them, his teammates all get asked: "When is Derrick coming back?"

"I get that question probably 40 times a day, between people on the street and people in your family," Gibson said.

"My friends and family ask me when Derrick's coming back a lot," Butler said. "But I just tell them don't worry about it because we don't know. It's all on him. I can't control it."

Said Cook: "Most of my friends and family know that he's going to come back when he's ready to come back; that's the important thing. Asking me isn't going to make him come back any faster. They just leave it alone and wait just like we are."

THE MAN HIMSELF

It's been more than 10 months since doctors surgically repaired the torn anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee, and not even Derrick Rose knows when he'll play again. "It can be tomorrow where I feel I can play the next game," Rose said last week, according to the Tribune. "Nobody knows but God."

Toews feels Rose's pain

By Brian Hedger
FOR REDEYE

If there's any athlete in Chicago who understands Derrick Rose's situation, it's might be Blackhawks captain Jonathan Toews.

The 24-year-old center missed the final two months of the 2011-12 regular season with a concussion and spent the final two weeks of it trying to decide on the best time for a return to game action.

Toews ultimately returned for a first-round playoff series against Phoenix, but not before some frustrating decisions in the final week to remain out of the last few games.

"You're out of your routine for so long, and every day you think it's going to get better and it might be that breakthrough day, and when it's not, it's pretty disappointing," Toews said earlier this month when asked about Rose's dilemma. "I can't imagine what a guy like that's going through, especially having that injury happen in the playoffs last year and the couple of seasons he had before that. You always want to follow that up and keep that momentum going, so it's definitely tough for him, I'm sure."

Toews said Rose, also 24, probably shouldn't return until he feels it's the right time, whenever that might be.

"I'm sure he knows that once he feels like 'Derrick Rose' again, that's the right time to come back—and to try and be a hero and show up [just] whenever is probably not going to work out in his favor," Toews said. "I'm sure it's a frustrating thing that [he has] to get over."

Patrick Kane, another 24-year-old Chicago star, took it a step further.

"I think he's so young in his career, to mess with an injury like that at this point, I'm sure they feel like they can win a championship, but with him and that injury and the way he plays, personally, I'd just shut him down for the year and get him ready for next season," Kane said.

Support from the enemy

Dwyane Wade and the Miami Heat hope to add to their 27-game winning streak Wednesday when they visit the Bulls. But Wade also sympathizes with the plight of Derrick Rose.

"When Derrick is ready ... no one knows his body like he does," Wade, who grew up in Markham and on the South Side, said Tuesday. "We can all speculate on whatever we think, but I think he's doing the right thing. He's taking his time to come back. I mean, he's a young guy.

"Obviously, the city of Chicago and the Chicago Bulls are going to lean on him a lot. He's going to do some amazing things. You don't want him to not be 100 percent. From afar I have been proud of how he has handled this situation, not rushing back until he's ready." TRIBUNE

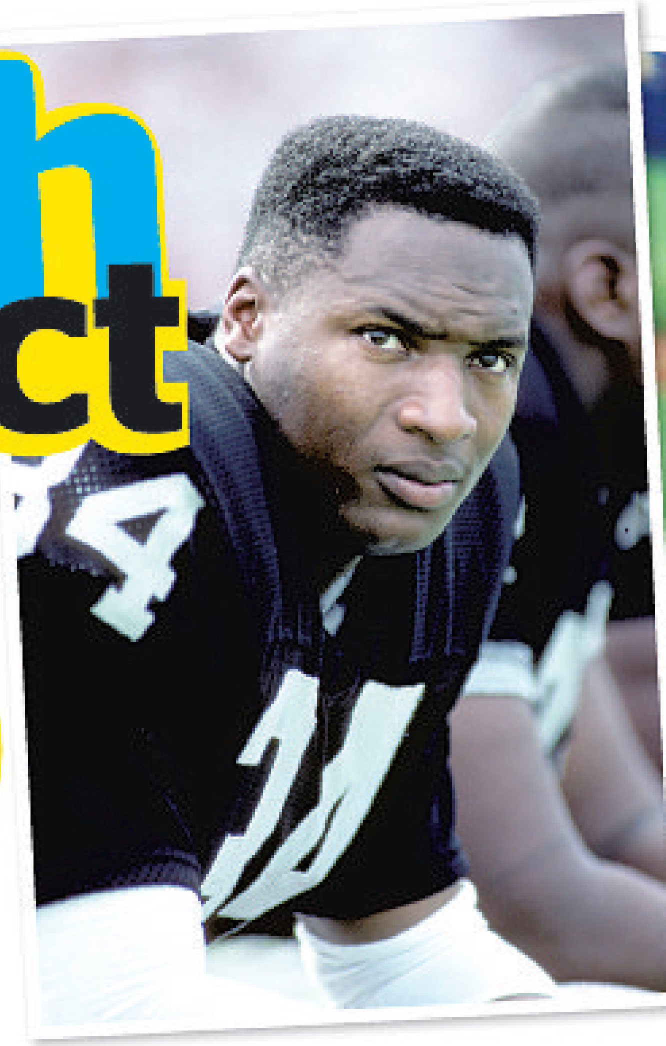
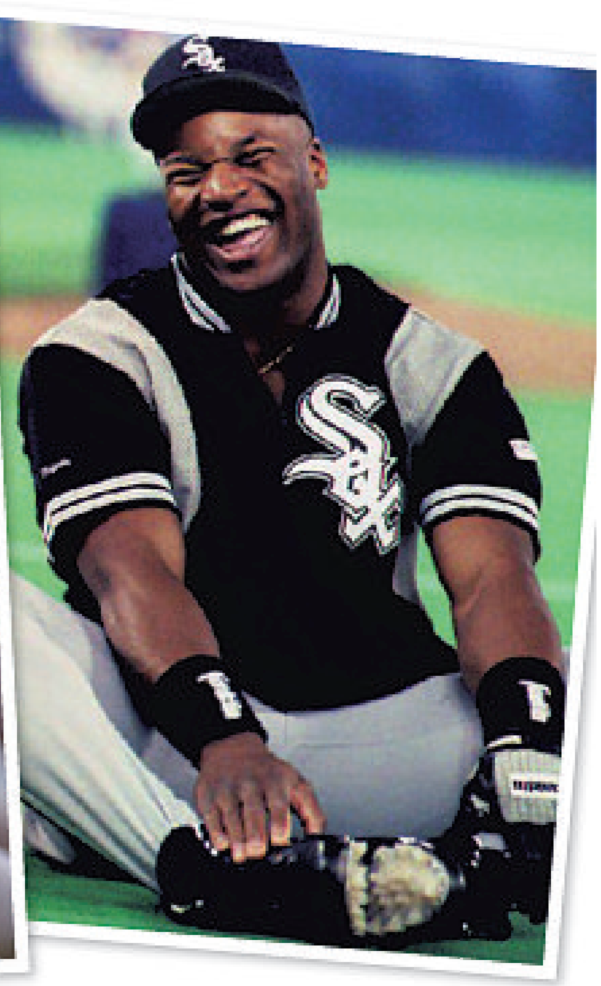
Pitch perfect

You guys! Bo Jackson is going to throw out the first pitch for the White Sox season opener Monday at U.S. Cellular Field! We haven't been this excited since Jackson hit a home run against the N.Y. Yankees in his first at-bat after coming back from hip replacement surgery in 1993. In honor of his glorious return, we've broken down what makes Bo so cool.





Bo Jackson

17% Those "Bo Knows" ads never got old. In fact, bring them back, Nike!

15% Wooden baseball bats still tremble in fear at the mention of Bo, who would crack those things like toothpicks over his legs—and even his head.

5% We still have a poster of him back in our bedroom at home, right next to the MJ poster.

50% He didn't just play football and baseball, he dominated both sports. Need a refresher? Check out the YouTube clips.

13% He went to Auburn. On the scale of annoying SEC teams, the Tigers aren't so bad.

BLACKHAWKS 2, CALGARY 0

Apparently, two games is the Blackhawks' limit when it comes to losing streaks. For the third time this season, the Hawks avoided dropping more than two contests in a row as they defeated the Flames 2-0 on Tuesday at the United Center. Nick Leddy and Brent Seabrook scored to provide the offense, and goaltender Ray Emery continued his stellar play against Calgary this season to remain unbeaten with a 12-0-0 record. The consistent Hawks improved to 25-4-3 this season and helped erase the memory of two straight losses after leading in the third period of both games.

APRIL CONCERT GUIDE

25 CAN'T-MISS SHOWS

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Chicago's concert season is starting to heat up, even if the weather isn't quite ready to follow suit. This April, the city expects visits from promising up-and-comers (Rhye, Joey Bada$$), still-vital vets (Bad Religion, Dr. John), and one menacing rocker, Nick Cave, who will be accompanied by some seriously Bad Seeds. Here are the 25 shows you shouldn't miss.

RAINING BANDS

1 Nick Cave & the Bad Seeds

April 1 at Chicago Theatre

While Nick Cave has spent recent years taking a chainsaw to middle age with Grinderman, "Push the Sky Away," his latest album with the Bad Seeds, simmers rather than boils over.

2 Wavves

April 1 at Subterranean

On "Afraid of Heights," the latest from the snotty garage-rock crew, Nathan Williams excises his personal demons atop a musical backdrop that recalls everyone from Nirvana to Weezer.

3 Sigur Ros

April 2 at UIC Pavilion

The Icelandic crew specializes in ethereal songs that evoke the mystery and grandeur of the natural world.

4 Joy Formidable

April 2 at the Vic

The Welsh trio behind 2011's "The Big Roar" continue to turn out an ocean of guitar noise on its latest album, the equally ferocious "Wolf's Law."

5 Garbage

April 3 at Riviera Theatre

Shirley Manson sings of being "resurrected, reborn," on Garbage's long-in-the-works comeback, "Not Your Kind of People."

6 Bad Religion

April 5 at Congress Theater

"True North," the band's 16th full-length release, might tackle familiar targets (corporate greed, corrupt politicians, etc.), but the music itself crackles with renewed life.

7 Caitlin Rose

April 9 at Schubas

The Nashville singer-songwriter has a sound that harkens back to the city's Music Row roots, and her latest album, "The Stand-In," packs in the old-time country charm.

Shirley Manson of Garbage

GETTYIMAGES

8 Iceage

April 10 at Empty Bottle

The Danish punks' sophomore album, "You're Nothing," finds the band expanding on its raw-nerve debut, incorporating more sophisticated arrangements without sacrificing any of the music's sheer brutality.

9 Joey Bada$$

April 11 at Reggie's Rock Club

The 18-year-old Brooklyn rapper sports an old-school sound at odds with his tender age.

10 Rhye

April 11 at Schubas

Toronto singer/producer Mike Milosh and Copenhagen producer Robin Hannibal specialize in the kind of ethereal R&B that Sade might spin to soothe a battered heart.

11 Screaming Females

April 11 at Subterranean

When frontwoman Marissa Paternoster sings "It's been a slow birth" early on the Jersey rockers' fifth album, she could easily be singing about the band's steady improvement.

12 The Men

April 11 at Lincoln Hall

Despite saddling itself with a Google-resistant name, this Brooklyn quintet still has managed to attract a larger audience with its blistering punk output.

22

17

13 Billy Bragg

April 12 and 13 at City Winery

The outspoken singer-songwriter specializes in angry tunes that target everything from Fox News honcho Rupert Murdoch to political cynics.

14 Atmosphere and Brother Ali

April 13 at Metro

The Minneapolis MCs employ their ample vocal talents in slightly different ways. While Atmosphere's songs tend to be internally driven, Brother Ali's music increasingly reflects his political ideals.

15 Phosphorescent

April 13 at Lincoln Hall

Georgia-born singer-songwriter Matthew Houck might have relocated to Brooklyn, but the hazy country rock on his latest album, "Muchacho," evokes his Southern roots.

16 Meek Mill

April 14 at House of Blues

On his major label debut, the aptly titled "Dreams and Nightmares," the Philadelphia MC spends equal time rhyming about the good life and his hardscrabble roots.

17 Now, Now

April 15 at Lincoln Hall

On "Threads," the Minneapolis trio turns out a string of pop-punk gems about stumbling your way to adulthood.

18 Shuggie Otis

April 16 and 17 at Lincoln Hall

After decades spent in relative obscurity, the reclusive soul man began his slow climb back into the spotlight when his 1974 album "Inspiration Information" picked up a cult following in the 1990s.

19 Dr. John & the Lower 911

April 17 at Space

The New Orleans funk legend, now 72, showed more life than musicians half his age on last year's Dan Auerbach-produced "Locked Down."

20 Marnie Stern

April 17 at Empty Bottle

The singer/guitarist tightens up her powerful sound on "The Chronicles of Marnia," a consistently excellent effort that easily outpaces its regrettable title.

23

21 Jim James

April 20 at the Vic

The My Morning Jacket frontman spends much of his solo debut wrestling with big ideas, and the music often matches his lyrical ambition, swinging from funk to spacey, jazz-flecked cuts.

22 Fitz & the Tantrums

April 23 at Double Door

The L.A. soul revivalists likely will preview a host of tracks from their sophomore album "More Than Just a Dream," due out in early May.

23 How to Destroy Angels

April 23 at the Vic

With How to Destroy Angels, a group that includes his wife, Mariqueen Maandig, and longtime producer/creative partner Atticus Ross, Nine Inch Nails mastermind Trent Reznor crafts songs that project something closer to existential dread rather than all-consuming rage.

24 Johnny Marr

April 25 at Metro

While former Smiths bandmate Morrissey continues to attract media attention with his mouth, Johnny Marr has quietly let his instrument do the talking, guesting on excellent albums by Modest Mouse and the Cribs before releasing his solo debut "The Messenger" earlier this year.

25 Josh Ritter & the Royal Country Band

April 27 at the Vic

The Americana-leaning singer-songwriter is at his shaggy best on his latest album, "The Beast in Its Tracks."

Mine eyes have seen the glory!

By Ernest Wilkins | REDEYE SOUND BOARD

On July 21, the Pitchfork Music Festival will host its third and final day with a lineup that some are (OK, I am) calling the best day of live music Chicago has ever seen. Now, I'm sure there have been days when three or more awesome acts have played in succession in Chicago, but they probably happened before I was born and therefore don't matter.

Let's break down the lineup and why you should be excited. One-day ($50) and three-day passes ($120) are on sale now. Pitchfork 2013 is set for July 19-21 at Union Park. Go to redeyechicago.com for the full lineup.

Tree The local rapper not only has an entertaining style, but a sound that you don't expect when you hear "Chicago rap."

DJ Rashad Rashad is a vocal member of a group of DJs keeping Chicago's juke scene relevant and interesting. Expect to fulfill your "watch awkward white guys dance" quota here.

Blood Orange Dev Hynes might be pulling double duty here, as he most likely will be a member of Solange's backing band (playing Saturday). His personal project Blood Orange is more post-punk than you may be used to, but it still has a solid groove.

Waxahatchee I don't know a thing about her other than that she's a one-woman band. One of the best things about music festivals is discovering a new band. Dear Waxahatchee, thank you for expanding my horizons. Sorry I only listen to Master P all day.

Evian Christ The producer not only will be lacing us with some strong instrumentals, he'll probably have the biggest contingent of music nerds in attendance for his set. Ever wanted to meet that one blogger you like? This might be your chance.

Autre Ne Veut He's making quality R&B music even though it doesn't fit into the narrow ideal of what R&B is "supposed to sound like."

Glass Candy Disco ain't dead, you ninnies. They have a fun New Wave sensibility about them, also. (That's an odd sentence, isn't it?)

Sky Ferreira She's the more interesting, "less high school ABC Family teen comedy" version of Taylor Swift.

Lil B the Based God Because he's #based, he's the weirdest rapper you will ever see, and his set will change your life.

Foxygen They play weird experimental rock.

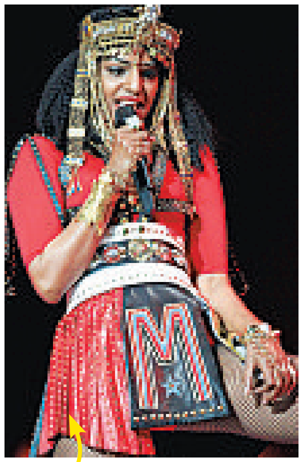
Chairlift I have no idea. Never heard them. RedEye intern Adam Lukach says that they're dope, so there you go. They seem to have a fun synthpop thing going on, so bully for them.

Killer Mike He's the best rapper you don't listen to regularly.

El-P He's the sixth-best rapper you don't listen to regularly. Also, he and Killer Mike will play tunes off of their amazing "R.A.P. Music" album, most likely.

TNGHT They're going to have you dancing the entire set. Also, you're probably going to be hearing their sound on the next Kanye album—they've been producing some songs for him already and Hudson Mohawke of the group is already signed to G.O.O.D.—so be an early adopter for once.

Toro Y Moi Feelings, people! His sound is one of the earliest appearances of "chillwave" (don't ask me, I don't know either) and is smoother than a baby's butt.



M.I.A. Unpredictabiity. Seriously, the woman does what she wants when she wants to do it.

R. Kelly If you seriously need me to explain why R. Kelly closing out Pitchfork is amazing, then you aren't invited to my birthday party anymore. He's the king of R&B, excluding nobody.

Yo La Tengo Because you'll need a break to go to the bathroom and get beer. What? They're boring.

TALL TALES

Meet the team that brought 'Big Fish' from the silver screen to Chicago's theater district

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

When producers Dan Jinks and Bruce Cohen made the decision to turn their 2003 film "Big Fish"—a Southern Gothic fantasy adventure about a son who attempts to come to terms with his dying father Edward Bloom's tall tales—into a musical, their first choice to direct and choreograph the production was Susan Stroman.

They feared that the Tony Award-winner would be too in-demand to accept, but Stroman was on board from the get-go. "I had seen the movie and loved it," Stroman said after a news conference at the Oriental Theatre. "It does lend itself beautifully to a musical because of the storytelling. And to be able to now have someone tell a story and then create it in front of the audience's eyes as it happens, that's what I love to do!"

And so, just as she did with "The Producers" back in 2001, Stroman and her team brought "Big Fish" to Chicago for its pre-Broadway world premiere. "It's great because when you are creating a musical, the last part of the process is the audience," she said. "Here's the thing, though—audiences here [in Chicago] understand theater. They love the theater; they're not dragged to the theater. And this is the place to try out. It was the Chicago audiences that sent us on to Broadway with 'The Producers,' you know."

So how do you make all those fantasy elements come to life onstage? We sat down with Stroman and scenic designer Julian Crouch to find out.

Elements of nature

"We do touch on all the elements of life—fire and water and earth and air. And everything is believable—even if it's not true, it's believable." —Susan Stroman

Tricky transformations

"It has far more scene changes than a lot of Broadway shows—over 40 locations. You can't have 40 different sets of walls, so somehow you have to find something that could be used in every scene but in a different way. ... When Edward Bloom is telling his son the story of what happened the day that his son was born, he talks about using his wedding ring for bait and the fish swallowing it and him ending up inside the fish's belly. ... We morph that bedroom into the inside of a fish's belly with treasure and pirates and skeletons and fish eggs." —Julian Crouch

Dance during wartime

"[Edward] starts talking about going to the war. And he exaggerates a bit, but he finds himself at a USO show. And so within that, I can do some tap dancing with some beautiful girls. And Edward Bloom gets caught up in the number [laughs] in his storytelling." —SS

A river runs through it

"The river is a very dominant thing all the way through the play. Somehow, I thought, this circus needs to be on the bank of a river—maybe on a dock. I settled on using planks because planks also fit into that circus world—they're sort of striped; you can put different color on each one. Suddenly, you can make it look like a circus with some tenting. The circus has these very colorful curtains and poles and ropes [which] help to define it—although, we have a few treats in there as well. We have elephants—they dance! I'm not going to tell you any more. [Laughs.]" —JC

NEW IN RIVER NORTH:

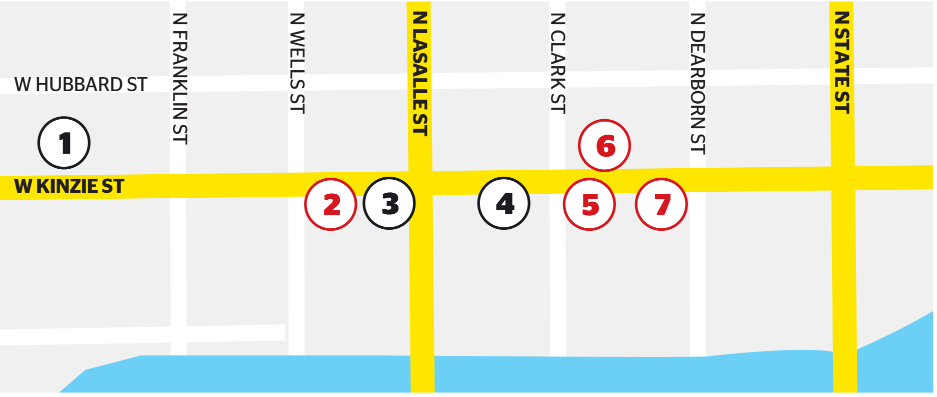
Kinzie Street

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

Hubbard Street holds the unofficial title of "most bustling strip in River North," but its neighbor one block to the south, Kinzie Street, is gaining momentum.

Classics such as Keefer's and Harry Caray's have been holding court on Kinzie for more than 10 and 20 years, respectively, while favorites such as Mercadito, Public House and Gilt Bar have moved in over the past few years.

Here's where the freshest newcomers—plus two in-the-works projects—fit in alongside the other hangouts that have opened along Kinzie Street in the past year.



1 Bavette's Bar & Boeuf

218 W. Kinzie St.
312-624-8154

Opened: August

2 Central Standard

169 W. Kinzie St.
312-527-9463

Opened: Last week
Details: Chef Ryan Wombacher takes diners on a journey through the eatery's namesake time zone, from St. Louis-style fried ravioli to grilled Gulf oysters with house-made hot sauce.

3 John Barleycorn

149 W. Kinzie St.
773-348-8899

Opened: November

4 Untitled

111 W. Kinzie St.
312-880-1511

Opened: June

5 Blackfinn Ameripub

353 N. Clark St.

Opening: July or August
Details: The address is on Clark Street, but the entrance for this massive bar and restaurant with an expected 100-plus tap handles is squarely on Kinzie. Sidewalk seating will stretch around the corner onto both streets.

Carne pizza at Siena Tavern

6 RPM Steak

60 W. Kinzie St.

Opening: Fall or winter
Details: The team behind RPM Italian—Molly, RJ and Jerrod Melman as well as chef Doug Psaltis and celebrity couple Bill and Giuliana Rancic—are at it again with this similarly named steakhouse.

7 Siena Tavern

51 W. Kinzie St.
312-595-1322

Opened: Last month
Details: This Italian-inspired restaurant and bar from the owners of Bull & Bear and Public House has some serious celebrity chef cred thanks to partner Fabio Viviani, a popular fan favorite from Bravo's "Top Chef."

3 DISHES WE CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT

Patatas ($11.50) at Tavernita 151 W. Erie St. 312-274-1111
Yeah, yeah, we've all had the traditional Spanish tapas dish patatas bravas. The offering at Tavernita isn't your average combination of crispy potatoes and red sauce; instead, the sauce adorning these fried egg-topped beauties provides more kick than usual, and the ample bits of chorizo create a hearty, unexpected nod to breakfast. And who doesn't enjoy breakfast at dinner? —Matt Pais

HILARY HIGGINS/REDEYE FILE

Tiramisu waffle sandwich ($5.95) at Bel 50
738 N. Clark St. 312-496-3948
This dessert sandwich hits the spot with a crispy, flaky waffle as the vehicle for a mixture of silky mascarpone cheese, chocolate mousse and a hint of espresso. I'm not ashamed to admit that I'd totally eat it for breakfast instead.
—Lisa Arnett

» Roasted marshmallow milkshake ($5) at The Squared Circle
2418 N. Ashland Ave. 773-904-8170
This milkshake charmed me from the start thanks to its toasted marshmallow garnish nestled in a crown of whipped cream. The best way I can describe its deliciousness is to say that it tastes like liquefied marshmallow fluff—and I mean that as the highest form of marshmallow-related flattery. —Lisa Arnett

Fallen 'Idol': the Fox hit's slow descent

Los Angeles Times

The producers at "American Idol" wanted to shore up a dramatic slide in ratings for the newest season, so they added three star judges and even allowed viewers to vote online for favorites up to 50 times simultaneously.

The changes for the 12th season didn't help. Ratings have plummeted by double digits for the second year in a row, down this season by 18 percent, to 15.8 million total viewers, according to Nielsen. In its fifth season in 2006, "Idol's" average audience was more than twice as large. And the declines are just as bad among viewers ages 18 to 49, the demographic advertisers crave most.

" 'Idol's' sort of run its life as being at the top of the heap," said Steve Smith, a partner at the Dallas-based ad agency Firehouse.

For eight straight seasons, the News Corp.-owned network has been No. 1 with viewers 18 to 49, a feat almost entirely attributable to "Idol." Even with ratings falling last year, the show grossed more than $800 million in ad revenue, according to Kantar Media.

More recently, "Idol" found a high-profile rival in NBC's "The Voice"—which returned Monday after a lengthy hiatus, with new judges Shakira and Usher joining Adam Levine and Blake Shelton—as well as Fox's own "The X Factor" with Simon Cowell, formerly the star of "Idol," which airs in the fall.

With ratings ebbing, "Idol" has been swept up into a horse race over celebrity judges, with each singing show trying to outdo the other. "Idol" this year added Nicki Minaj, Mariah Carey and Keith Urban as judges. Now Fox is beginning to see the downside.

Fremantle Media, which produces "Idol," handed Carey a paycheck reportedly worth $18 million, making her one of the highest-paid people on TV even though she had never been on a series. "X Factor" paid Britney Spears $15 million last fall for a performance that was almost universally panned. She won't be back next year. Of course, those salaries pale in comparison to that of Cowell, who according to Forbes was making at least $45 million per year in his final "Idol" years. But some recent "Idol" judges have been remarkably well-paid considering their performance.

This month Minaj, who makes a reported $8 million this season for her work on the program, showed up nearly 15 minutes late for the crucial first live telecast from Hollywood. She finally slid into her chair during a commercial break, never addressing her tardiness.

Shortly before the "Idol" season premiere in January, reports surfaced that Minaj and Carey were feuding, a tale so conveniently juicy and gossip-ready that many fans assumed it was planted by the producers.

Crystal Bowersox

'Idol' alumni look for indie success

Los Angeles Times

Though it's still—on some nights—the most-watched show on television, "American Idol" is by all accounts a smaller proposition than it once was, with fewer viewers, less cultural clout and a seemingly diminished ability to produce megastars on the order of Kelly Clarkson and Carrie Underwood.

The retrenchment appears to be affecting veterans of the program too: At the South by Southwest music festival this month, Season 8 winner Kris Allen and Season 9 winner Lee DeWyze both could be seen sharing cozy club stages with the kind of up-and-coming acts SXSW was designed to spotlight.

And this week two more "Idol" alums—Crystal Bowersox and David Archuleta—are putting out new albums through indie labels whose modest coffers probably rival the majors' hair-and-makeup budgets.

"Crystal hasn't looked for limousines or any of that from us," said Randall Grass, general manager at Shanachie Entertainment, which released "All That for This" on Tuesday. "The way she grew up," Grass continued, "she's not interested in unnecessary stuff."

Indeed, if Bowersox is enjoying fewer showbiz perks now than she did during "Idol," the folk-blues belter sounds at home on the appealingly laid-back "All That for This"; it's a big improvement over 2010's clunky "Farmer's Daughter," which seemed designed to sell Bowersox's hippie-chick vibe to fans of Rihanna (or at least Pink).

Working with producer Steve Berlin of Los Lobos, she rides a gentle funk groove in "Fall Into Place" and duets handsomely with Jakob Dylan in the stripped-down "Stitches." Even the presence of a cover version, which might've signaled some residual allegiance to "Idol's" karaoke-style model, feels oddly idiosyncratic—it's a roots-rocky take on the Sundays' early-'90s alt-pop hit "Here's Where the Story Ends."

"The album is a different kind of presentation than what people normally associate with 'Idol,' " Grass said, and for Bowersox that lower-key approach seems like the right one.

The same goes for Archuleta's "No Matter How Far," his first release for eOne Music. Not because the record is particularly good—it sounds like a dinky Justin Bieber knock-off—but because Archuleta isn't around to promote it: The Season 7 runner-up (and devout Mormon) is serving a two-year mission in South America.

That's the kind of break unlikely to be looked upon gladly by executives at Jive or Interscope. But for a small label such as eOne, which has signed numerous artists following their major-label experiences, it offers a chance to get a piece of the "Idol" action. Even if that action isn't what it used to be.

A Tabura class last year in New York

Reuters

Group fitness classes are taking an ethnic turn, experts say, celebrating diversity by reaching across cultures for inspiration and combining diverse disciplines to keep workouts fresh and exercisers inspired.

First there was Zumba, the Latin-based dance craze, then Capoeira, a Brazilian blend of martial arts and dance said to have originated with 16th century slaves.

Tabura, a high-energy class that pairs West African dance moves with military-style punching, jabbing and kickboxing drills, is one of the newer hybrids.

“I’m excited to see fitness embrace our American cultural diversity and bring benefits of Latin dance like Zumba or African dance like Tabura with martial arts from Asia into the mainstream,” said Shirley Archer, an American Council on Exercise spokesperson.

Dance fitness classes provide an aerobic workout that can improve heart health, burn calories and fat and improve mood and endurance, according to Archer, a fitness and wellness expert based in Singer Island, Fla.

Reign Hudson, a fitness instructor at Crunch in New York, said she created Tabura, which means drill and endurance in Swahili, by fusing her two passions.

“I’d taught West African dance, and then I got certified in tae bo,” she said. “Those were my two favorite classes so I decided to bring them together.”

The class, which is fired by live conga and junjun drums or African house music, provides a cardio workout and toning. It also includes stretching, intervals of dance and drills, leg work and running in place.

West African dance is about storytelling, Hudson explained, and different dances have different names and action. A dance called Cuckoo is performed to celebrate a wedding or birthday.

Archer explained that integrating kicks and knee lifts can increase the toning effects for the muscles of the lower body, while punches and blocks tone the upper body.

“One-legged moves improve balance and combination moves improve coordination, rhythm and timing,” said Archer, who has trained in shotokan karate [Japanese style] and tae kwon do [Korean style].

Another benefit of martial arts moves is that the training is balanced, requiring equal repetitions on both sides of the body, she added.

Archer said the beauty of dance fitness classes is that they’re so much fun people forget they’re working out.

“And you can make friends,” she said. “Research findings show that the single most important factor to sticking with any exercise program is social support.”

Just don't call it 'My Big Fat Greek Baby'

CNN

Actress, writer and director Nia Vardalos talked about infertility, her new book, "Instant Mom," and reprising the blockbuster role in "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" that made her famous.

Instant Mom
TODDLER ADOPTED SEPARATELY
INSTRUCTIONS NOT INCLUDED
Nia Vardalos

Tell us what your book is about and why you decided to write it.
I wanted to write about the tenaciously stubborn quest for happiness I believe lies within all of us. Plus I'm trying to blow the lid off the silent failure women feel about infertility. For years, I was ashamed, then via foster care found my daughter ... when she was almost 3 years old. I didn't adopt a baby. Hence the title.

People feel like they know you by way of "My Big Fat Greek Wedding"—because that was a personal film in many ways—but this book actually is much more personal, much more emotional. Was it tough to write? Because you're actually a very private person.
I am nauseous from the acid reflux I'm having because I am going public in this book. Sure, I enjoy making fun of my family for fun and profit, but to reveal vulnerable truths like this is completely unlike me. However, I have a nagging feeling that the success of "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" happened because I'm supposed to be using my big mouth to talk about adoption.

You're primarily identified with comedies. Was it difficult to write about the incident when you were the victim of a crime?
Terrifying. When I finished that chapter, I debated keeping it in because, well, now people will know. And although I describe it in what was, for me, excruciating detail, I eventually found the humor in the experience when I was writing about it because of the human idiocy I encountered after the incident. Anyway, it may be a mistake, but I kept it in. Then I told my mom.

Let's talk about the title, "Instant Mom." Be honest, did your publisher want to call it "My Big Fat Greek fill-in-the-blank-with-something-about-parenting"?
Here's a humblebrag: There were about 10 offers for this autobiography, and several wanted to call it "My Big Fat Greek Baby." Which is why I went with HarperCollins.

What's that "instant" transformation like? One minute it's game night with Tom Hanks and Rita Wilson, and the next minute you have a daughter in preschool, right?
Yep, one evening I'm waving on a red carpet whilst sucking in my gut, and the next day I was waving goodbye to my daughter as she walked into preschool, whilst sucking back my snot-bawling and wiping her spilled apple juice out of my Prada purse.

My Greek grandmother will yell at me if I don't ask you about the chances of a sequel to "My Big Fat Greek Wedding."
Yes, I have been approached to the write the sequel. I am finally coming around to the idea of doing it because [co-star] John Corbett and I hung out recently, singing and playing guitars until 3 a.m. In that moment of clarity that only comes with too much wine and the haze of approaching dawn, I suddenly visualized where Toula and Ian end up. I saw their world very clearly. Toula and Ian's life is very similar to the easy and solid friendship I felt with John that night. But with less guitars.

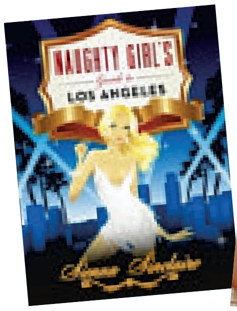
AUTHOR MAPS 'NAUGHTY' L.A.

Chicago Tribune

Who says tour guidebooks have to be dull?

Certainly not Sienna Sinclaire, author of "Naughty Girl's Guide to Los Angeles." Sinclaire, an adult model, author and sex coach, has produced nearly 400 pages of adult diversions for locals or visitors to L.A. And those diversions come in all shapes and sizes.



Sinclaire

The book's subject matter ranges from extreme (just use your imagination) to almost grandma tame (high-end lingerie shops and places to get a spray tan). Pick your degree of naughtiness.

There are shopping destinations (everything from vintage shoes to chocolate treats that Fannie May only dreamed of) all the way to instructions on how to visit movie sets—not the "Lincoln" type—with Sinclaire as your guide.

For the edgy but less extreme, she recommends the bikini club Plan B ("a non-nude strip club; I always suggest this for women who don't want their men looking at naked girls"), and innocuous meet-and-greets such as Glamourcon, where photographers and Playboy models engage in fully clothed conversation.

> "Everybody gets dressed up in naughty pirate costumes ... It's a way to meet more people."

For a video interview with the author, visit redeyechicago.com.

Then there's Buccaneer Days on Catalina Island.

"Everybody gets dressed up in naughty pirate costumes," she said. "It's a way to meet more people. Maybe they'll suggest other events. You never know."

Well, maybe not for certain, but we kind of have an idea.

"People are half-naked, everyone is having fun," she said.

In some of these places you can even wear masks, so there there's no need to worry about ending up on the Internet and having to face the torches-and-pitchforks wrath of your less adventurous neighbors back home.

And, of course, you also can wear furry handcuffs.

'BioShock Infinite' creator Ken Levine
MCT FILE

Bioshock's main man back to stay?

Los Angeles Times

Some video game makers are motivated to make the most detailed simulation of warfare. Others re-create childhood dreams of monsters in caves. Ken Levine is obsessed with ideologies run amok.

The creator of the hit "BioShock" series—the first of the so-called "smart shooters"—and head of Boston-based studio Irrational Games makes video games about worlds in which an obsessive leader has created his own would-be utopia and the player must deal with the messy consequences.

In 1999's "System Shock 2," it's an artificial intelligence on an alien world whose genetic experiments go amok. In 2007's "BioShock," players descend into an underwater city founded by an acolyte of Ayn Rand. And in this week's "BioShock Infinite," one of the most anticipated games of 2013, it's a city in the sky ruled by charismatic, patriotic religious fanatics.

Levine is known in his industry as a mad genius, a man whose games take five or six years to make, burn out staffers along the way and end up blowing players' minds. It's a process he can't seem to escape, and it seems to make him jealous of the villains of his own work.

"All of these people think they have the complete prescription, and I'm like, 'I have no idea,' " Levine said during a recent visit to Los Angeles.

"I keep making games with that vibe because I feel that way in the world."

The trim, bearded 46-year-old frequently speaks about his philosophy and process, making him one of the few people in the game industry, along with "SimCity's" Will Wright and "Metal Gear" creator Hideo Kojima, who are singularly identified with their work.

"I don't know if it's possible to be an auteur in the big-budget game space with its compartmentalized production and corporate mandates, but Ken Levine is probably as close as gets," said critic Michael Abbott, who runs the blog brainygamer.com.

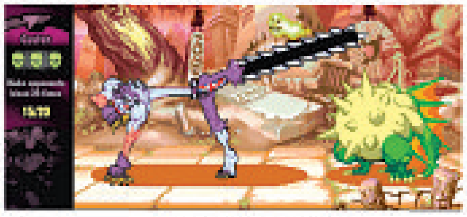
THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH | FOR REDEYE

Gears of War: Judgment

Xbox 360

Much like Sony's latest "God of War," Microsoft's "Gears of War" looks to the past with a prequel that slightly tweaks the games' successful formula. Instead of telling a straightforward story, "Judgment" plays as a series of narrated flashbacks. You play as four characters—two of them supporting players from previous games—and testify before a military tribunal after being accused of treason. You shoot your way through enemy forces while telling your side of the story. The multiplayer boasts the addition of an enjoyable Overrun mode, which pits a team of player-controlled human soldiers against Locust baddies online. Unfortunately, Overrun comes at the expense of "Gears 3's" excellent Horde mode. Hardcore fans will enjoy breaking out their chainsaw guns once again in "Judgment," but overall these "Gears" are showing signs of rust.



Darkstalkers Resurrection

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3

What would happen if a werewolf fought a zombie? Or if Sasquatch battled, um, Little Red Riding Hood? Yep, this gothic 1990s arcade series sure has its cartoonish quirks, but "Darkstalkers" is severely underrated as a fighter. You control one of a host of fantasy characters and memorize all sorts of powerful moves to pummel your computer or human opponent. The 15-year-old graphics and gameplay haven't aged perfectly, but Lincoln Park's Iron Galaxy Studios has done a stellar job at converting "Darkstalkers" to current gaming consoles.

Luigi's Mansion: Dark Moon

Nintendo 3DS

I was skeptical when Nintendo recently declared 2013 the "year of Luigi," but "Luigi's Mansion: Dark Moon" proves that Mario's lanky sibling deserves his brand-new spotlight. This adventure casts the mustachioed Mario brother as a ghostbuster who must roam the halls of spooky mansions in order to suck up various spectres with his Poltergust 5000 vacuum device. Don't worry, there's no real horror here; the vibe is more "Scooby Doo" than "Paranormal Activity." Some of the ghosts require fast reflexes to catch, but this is more of a puzzle game than an action game, meaning you'll have to rely on wits more than nimble fingers. Between the charming single-player campaign and a wildly creative multiplayer mode, "Luigi's Mansion" is a place well worth exploring.

TODAY IN THE YEAR …

1836: The first Mormon temple, in Kirtland, Ohio, was dedicated.
1973: "The Godfather" won the Academy Award for best movie of 1972, but its star, Marlon Brando, refused to accept his Oscar for best actor.
2005: In a live Internet interview with Jesse Jackson, Michael Jackson declared himself "completely innocent" of child molestation charges and said he was the victim of a conspiracy.

LIL WAYNE LYRIC OR CRAIGSLIST PERSONAL AD? YOU BE THE JUDGE

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Did you think guesting on a Limp Bizkit song was the biggest thing Lil Wayne would do this week? Ha! Weezy dropped "I Am Not A Human Being II" on Tuesday, his second release in six months. We carefully weeded through the lyrics on "I Am Not a Human Being II" (seriously, so few of them are printable in a family publication), to give you this challenge: Lil Wayne lyric or Craigslist personal ad excerpt? The results may have some of these dudes searching for a record deal. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

1 "I've had to put them across my lap. I've had to bail them out a few times because they got in trouble."

2 "I have a penis (dimensions upon request)."

3 "Had a dream that my [bleep] turned to Megatron."

4 "Its passover and I keep the 8 days of the holiday."

5 "Wanna hold hands then watch movies."

6 "My [bleep] could be the next black president."

7 "Movie, drinks, 420."

8 "I would talk about my [bleep], but man that [bleep'd] be a long story."

9 "Are you open to being my naughty girl next door closet nymphomaniac?"

10 "These hoes love me like Satan, man!"

11 "She had cat eyes, nine lives, no tan lines, thigh highs."

12 "PLEASE STOP SENDING ME BS TO MY BOX I AM ASKING NICELY."

ANSWER KEY: 1 CL; 2 CL; 3 "IANAHB." LW; 4 CL; 5 "Curtains." LW; 6 "IANAHB." LW; 7 CL; 8 "No Worries." LW; 9 CL; 10 "Bitches Love Me (Good Kush and Alcohol)." LW; 11 "Back To You." LW; 12 CL

HOT DATE

MARCH 27

As in Wednesday! That's when the 28th season of "The Real World" premieres on MTV. As in 28.

James Franco
GETTY IMAGES

"I mean, I don't want to brag about it. I don't know how that got out."

—James Franco, to Howard Stern, on turning down Lindsay Lohan's sexual advances several years ago

Special guests

"How I Met Your Mother" is turning into the nice houseguest who just won't go away, but at least there's this: Keegan-Michael Key and Casey Wilson will appear in the season finale May 13, vulture.com reports. But seriously: Who's the damn mother already?

Justin Bieber

Mr. Freeze?

With apparently little regard for the cold—or for attracting paparazzi—Justin Bieber removed his shirt as he strolled through the airport in Lodz, Poland, on Monday after a concert, eonline.com reports. "He wasn't told to take off his clothes," an airport spokeswoman told Reuters. Of course he wasn't. Meanwhile, the Bieb is under investigation for battery in L.A. over a claim he assaulted a neighbor. Can a Bieb get a break around here?

THE DIGIT

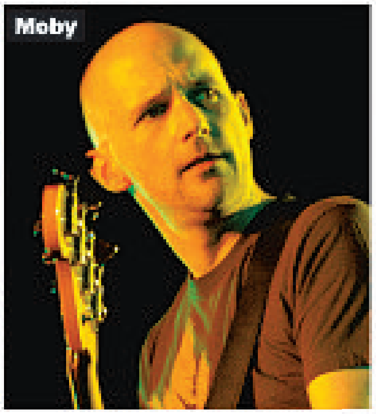
ZERO

That's how many three-day passes are left for Lollapalooza on Aug. 2-4 in Grant Park. The good news: Some VIP passes and other pricey options still are available at lollapalooza.com, and single-day tickets go on sale April 9.

That's strange

In the category of "weirdest item received from a fan by mail," it might be hard to top Jared Leto, who claimed in a British radio interview he once opened a package containing a severed ear and the note "Are you listening?" usmagazine.com reports. So, which was it—left ear or right?

Bassnectar



Moby

Spring is in the air

Who's ready to dance? Moby, Nero and Crystal Method were among the acts announced Tuesday as part of the full lineup for the Spring Awakening Music Festival on June 14-16 at Soldier Field. Bassnectar and Calvin Harris also are on the bill. (Sorry, no Skrillex this year.) For ticket information and the full lineup, visit springawakeningfestival.com.
